

Student Hotspotting

An interprofessional learning collaborative

What is Student Hotspotting?

The Interprofessional Student Hotspotting Learning Collaborative is an annual program that trains interdisciplinary teams of professional students from schools around the country to learn to work with complex medical and social needs using a patient-centered approach.

Student Hotspotting is part of the Camden Coalition of Healthcare Providers' effort to educate and provide mentorship for the next generation of health care professionals, and is run through our National Center for Complex Health and Social Needs.

Student Hotspotting hubs

Four regional hubs operate the Student Hotspotting program for teams within and outside their institutions. In partnership with the Camden Coalition and the National Center, each hub is responsible for managing and hosting student teams, and for advancing the field of complex care in their communities. The hub institutions are:

- Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia, PA
- Southern Illinois University in Springfield, IL
- University of Utah in Salt Lake City, UT
- Samuel Merritt University in Oakland, CA

Apply to become a Student Hotspotting team

Student teams participate in online curriculum, monthly case conferencing, receive mentoring, and gain access to a curriculum learning guide. Students or faculty interested in setting up a Hotspotting team at their institution should contact studenthotspotting@camdenhealth.org. More information about the program, as well as a link to the student team application can be found on our website at www.nationalcomplex.care/offerings/student-hotspotting.

Partners

The Student Hotspotting program is supported by our partners:

- Association of American Medical Colleges
- Primary Care Progress
- National Academies of Practice
- Council on Social Work Education
- American Association of Colleges of Nursing

About the

National Center

The National Center is an initiative of the Camden Coalition of Healthcare Providers in Camden, New Jersey. The National Center works to engage a wide range of national stakeholders across the spectrum of healthcare and health policy around improving care for high-cost, high-need consumers. The founding sponsors of the National Center are the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, the Atlantic Philanthropies, and AARP. Learn more about the National Center on our website: nationalcomplex.care.

